Meet the challenges of cross-border review

Collecting, analyzing, and reviewing large data volumes in response to litigation or regulatory inquiries requires organizations to navigate a complex web of global regulations, business practices, and technologies. Consilio offers extensive experience in planning & consulting, project management, and non-English language review for cross-border and multilanguage eDiscovery.

Compliance with Data Privacy Laws

Organizations involved in cross-border matters must assess where custodians and data sources are located, and whether (and under what circumstances) the data can be moved from that territory. In the EU, for example, the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR) places strict limitations on the export of personal data from EU member states to certain countries, including the U.S. Other nations across the globe also have data privacy laws protecting personal data—including names, email addresses, account numbers and other individual identifiers—outside of their borders. Similarly, blocking statutes in some jurisdictions prevent organizations from transferring information across borders to respond to U.S. discovery requests.

Consilio global consultants bring their expertise in navigating these privacy laws, and work closely with clients and counsel—in the U.S. and locally in the international jurisdiction—to develop eDiscovery strategies that respect data privacy principles.
